/ IMAGERY OF SPRING. P.

Spring has come! For a considerable part of the human race this is the most beautiful sentence in language. It an-nounces the arrival of a new life, a renewal of hope, an end of various suffer-ing, coaffict, discouragement. Spring, or at least some show of change and renewal, is always coming somewhere, out nowhere does it mean so much as in these northern latitudes for the farmer, the poet, the young maiden and the boy. There is not a human being in these latitudes who does not know when the sap begins to run up the tree trunks. It is then, if ever, the sweet fluid into a bucket and boils it down into a poem. Or it is then, if he prefers another flaure that he special or the special or th he prefers another figure, that he begins to sing like the early birds, who are stimulated by the tint of green and the flush of blessems to thoughts of do-mestic life. Why is it that spring poet-ry is considered "freeh" and is quoted w in the market? There is a notion that it is immature. People say that they do not care to drink so much sap: they want art applied to the natural product; they want it boiled down till it will crystallize. They say that much of the spring poetry is sticky, by which they mean sentimental. There is some injustice in this. The poet is really moved by the universal senti-ment, and it seems hard that his product should be classed as raw material. There is no sound sweeter to country ears than the cackle of the spring hen some merning when the south wind blows and the snow banks are shrinking away, when the barn door is open, and the enves are dripping, and the fleecy clouds promise transition, both showers and fine weather. The hen is not making music, but she announces that she has begun the production of a somewhat indefinite series of new lives. To us who know life there is a note of sadness in the cackle, for it is probable that the maternal instinct of the hen is to be disappointed by the nest-hunting boy and the greed of the different persons as requested.

And now let me add that I have not life turned into a commercial operation. But no objection is made against the eggs because they are too fresh. Nor is any question raised by the statesmen in Washington whether they are raw material or finished product. To the hen they are both. The hen is no tariff reformer. She is just solicitous for the prosperity of her I think also that Paskola needs little they are raw material or finished just solicitous for the prosperity of her race. The poet is sometimes more culthey have or have not life in them, but he sells them to the magazines and newspapers, and the public is so often deceived that it raises a cry that raw material should not come in free.

But this line of remark belittles the glorious conception of the resurrection time of the year. It is a sort of Miriam song of triumph that the Red Sea is passed, and that the horrid forces of the enemy are drowned in the spring freshet. There is also in it the feeling of security and confidence that whatever Frost and Thaw may do hereafter, things are going in the right direction, and the sun is every morning rising further north. In this exultant spirit it is easy to forgive enemies and creditors. There are so many signs of coming abundance and gracious ease in living. Spring has come! But let there be no grains of deception in these papers. It has come to the reader, but not to the writer. There can be no confidence in the study if its integrity is doubted. Its reasoning may not commend itself to the reader, but it is in its honesty. While this song of the Vernal Equinox is being penned, the ground is white with snow, the bare branches of the trees are thrashing about in a cruel northwest gale, there is a sort of lurid light along the western sky, which if seen by a sailor at sea would make him reef his sails and send the passengers below, and the telegraph announces that a Rocky Mountain cyclone is traveling thither, waltzing along in the arms of a Texan hurricane. These are the facts. All the rest is the work of the imagination. And it is justified. For the New England man, most part of the year, lives by his imagination. Without it he would perish. - Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine.

NOTHING HAPPENED.

But Bud Harkins Believes in Presenti-ments Just the Same, "Of course I believe in presentiments," said Bud Harkins as he joined a small group that had gathered in the Lindell hotel corridor, St. Louis, a few days ago.

"One of the most vivid things that ever occurred to me in that way happened about a year ago. I was in New Mexico and my wife and baby were in Tolede, O. One night I was lying in bed, and had not yet gone to sleep, when a mist seemed to envelop the room, and out from the mist came a picture of my wife leaning over the baby, and to my horror the child was work the next day. "There was no station from which I could telegraph, and if there had been it would have done no good. I knew just as well as though I had been present that the child was dead.

"I left the night after my vision for home, telegraphing at the earliest pos-sible opportunity. All the way to Chiengo I had a strange feeling that I should not take the first train to Toledo; that there would be an accident, and when I reached the city I was ac tually relieved to find that we had missed connection. I telegraphed my wife and she answered fully there." A chorus of voices asked: "Had it "Happened? I wasn't talking about happenings. Nothing had happened. I was only talking about presentiments, and I believe in them, because

BRIDETON, N. J., April 11, 1894. The Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade st., GENTLEMEN—Seeing your advertise-ment of Paskola as a flesh-forming food,

It is sup posed that the precipice-like peculiarity of the mound is due to the action of conflicting wind currents that blow about the cape.

-At one peried of the last century there was a fashion of writing didactic works in verse. Brumoy's "Art of Glass Making." Vaniere's "Treatise on Raising Pigeons," Du Cerceau's "Tribes of Butterflies," are notable examples, while works on orange culture, on kitchen gardening, on the care of fish, on cooking, on the keeping of cows and the best way to make butter are still extant. La Brun wrote a poem on sweetmeats, someone else on mineral waters, Vida one on chess, Huet one on the use of tea, and another on the benefits of salt.

-The Co-operative Union Laundries. of Indianapelia, a joint stock concern owned by laundry girls was started with an investment of $3,590 in cash. A dispatch to the New York Tribune states that the report of the manager at the recent meeting shows that the year's total receipts were over $19,000, with $1,500 of good book accounts. The average number on the pay roll during the year was twenty-one, the lowest wages paid, $6.50, with overtime at once and a half the regular rate. Counting the debts paid and the amount paid for new material, the net earnings above the expenses yielded a profit of over 90 per cent. Considering the business depression the girls feel that they have no cause to complain.

-A pretty fad of recent birth among members of New York society is to personate mythological nymphs and goddesses in their photographs, and this is done with great success by many fair women whose forms and faces would not discredit the originals. Of course, such pictures are not for general distribution, but form a most interesting collection, as the dress, pose, and even expression, of the original conceptions are often copied with wonderful fidelity. The growing popularity of the idea necessitates the employment of a woman to attend to that branch of the business. The effect of wind-blown hair and drapery, usually a feature of these photographs, is produced by means of a powerful electric fan near the subject, in operation.
